Commitment to Impartiality

Denetik accepts the United Nations principles regarding Sustainable Development and carries out its work in this direction.

Denetik conducts its auditing, monitoring, and certification activities completely independently, impartially, and unaffected by financial, commercial, political, psychological, or other factors that could influence the decision-making/evaluation process. In the conflict of interest analysis we prepared, Denetik conducted a conflict of interest analysis by evaluating all possible factors that could impact the impartiality of employees at all levels involved in these activities, as well as appointed committees, and taking necessary measures.

The conflict of interest analysis is periodically reviewed by the Committee to Maintain Impartiality.

Certification services provided by Denetik are available to all requesting organizations. Both requesting and certified organizations are provided with impartial, unbiased, and equal service. Denetik does not enter into any protocols with any association, foundation, organization, or group to carry out its activities, and does not request such from any organization. No financial or other conditions are imposed for services. All mandatory rules and documents apply to all organizations. No hidden discrimination is made that would alter the quality or form of service. The activities of the represented certification organization are not recommended or marketed to its clients in any way that would create a conflict of interest, compromise impartiality, or violate the required accreditation rules.

Denetik does not certify the quality management systems of other certification bodies.

It does not certify the management system of an organization for which it provides internal audit services within two years after this service.

Denetik and its employees do not provide or facilitate management system consulting services. It does not offer or market certification activities in conjunction with the activities of management system consulting firms. None of its employees or management units have participated in the certification process of an organization for which it has provided systems consulting services within the last two years. Denetik employs full-time personnel for marketing and sales activities. Customers and other organizations may recommend Denetik based on service satisfaction and competence, but no commission will be paid for this. Furthermore, no certification guarantee is given to any customer who submits a recommendation.

Audit staff, committees, auditors and technical experts fully and completely apply the principles of impartiality and confidentiality.

Denetik is not concerned with any financial gain. It undertakes to have no financially beneficial relationships that could influence the audit outcome (such as receiving fees beyond standard fees, expensive gifts such as vacations or phone calls, threats from the client to switch certification bodies , etc.), and that its personnel, auditors, technical experts, and relevant committee and board members will not be influenced by commercial, financial, or other pressures. This is guaranteed by the Impartiality, Confidentiality, and Job Training Commitment signed by the employees.

The certification decision is made by persons other than those involved in the audit.

Denetik maintains all information and documents related to the certified organization, excluding publicly available information, in accordance with its confidentiality principles. This information may be shared with the accreditation body upon request. In the event that information sharing is required for legal reasons, the legal requirements will be adhered to, and the organization will be informed accordingly.

Denetik undertakes that the information and advertisements it provides to the customer and the market are accurate.
